Winter Storm Warning From the National Weather Service

SAN BERNARDINO – A storm will move across Southern California beginning Saturday morning, February 28, 2015, and into Sunday, March 1, 2015, according to the National Weather Service (NWS). Snowfall is expected to fall at or above the 4,000 foot level and may affect portions of the mountain highways in San Bernardino and Riverside Counties.

Bring your chains! You may be required to chain-up at higher elevations. Pack a travel kit in your car as mountain roads become heavily congested on the weekends. Motorists should prepare for longer commute times if traveling to the local mountains and points north through the weekend.

Caltrans maintenance crews are prepared and are working around the clock to keep local highways and interstates open. Equipment and materials are prepositioned to keep traffic moving on Interstate 15 through the Cajon Pass and Mountain Pass and on mountain highways.

Follow the directions of the California Highway Patrol and maintain a safe distance behind Caltrans equipment, a minimum of 200 feet.
